

Social and Personal

THE society event of the week was the wedding of Miss Caroline Shields to Trusten Polk Draper, which took place in St. Paul's Church last evening at 8:30 o'clock. Rev. Robert W. Forsyth officiating. Pink and white flowers decorated the altar and tall palms flanked the chancel. In the handsome drawing rooms of the Shields' home the same flowers were used in banking the mantels, with baskets of pink buds and great bunches of pink blossoms used in profusion throughout the house.

Mrs. L. Newton Vaughan was her sister's dame of honor. She wore a gown of pale pink chiffon, hand-embroidered in Oriental design, built over pink satin. The maid of honor, Miss Harriet Martin Shields, wore a pink satin, similarly embroidered. They both carried bouquets of white lilies and pink sweet peas. The bridesmaids wore attractive costumes of pale pink satin, with tunic of Valenciennes lace. They carried white lilies. They were: Miss Leary, Jessie Scott Denham, of Savannah, Ga.; Mary King Nash, of Portsmouth; Elizabeth Barton, of Kansas City; Madeline Draper, of Wilmington, Del.; and Mrs. Reuben Satterthwaite, of Wilmington, Del.

Oliver, of Pittsburgh, and James Reynolds, of Chicago. The bride entered the church on the arm of her brother, Charles Shields, who gave her away. Her gown of heavy white satin was a triumph of artistic needlework. The hand embroidery on it was of Oriental pattern—the scarab design, chosen as an emblem of good luck. It was cut V-neck and made with a court train. Her long tulle veil was held with a coronet of orange blossoms, and she carried
